A return to Gateway, where a scientific procedure unlocks vast human potential.

In the Winter 1983-84 issue of SEARCH, I presented some unusual experiences resulting from my participation in "Gateway," a consciousness exploration program offered by The Monroe Institute of Applied Sciences. (The Institute was founded by Robert Monroe, author of the international best seller, Journeys Out of the Body.) In that article I related Gateway to my training as an apprentice shaman. Additional inquiry indicates the Institute's research reaches into and explores many areas. Very compelling, they not only represent Monroe's personal odyssey into diverse realms of consciousness but also have concrete application in the everyday world of personal development, teaching and psychiatry.
